"If you like cashmere, you'll love alpaca!"

Alpacas belong to the camel family, and are indigenous to the South American Andes. Their wool is one of the most prized natural fibers in the world, boasting impressive characteristics: Alpaca is extremely fine but nevertheless resilient and temperature regulating: cooling in summer and warming in winter. Alpaca is also known for its longevity and durability.

The special finish of this textile, which is woven in Italy, and the high-quality composition of exquisite alpaca yarn, mixed with high-quality wool from New Zealand, makes Erice an absolute delight to touch.
